YOUNG ISRAEL OF WEST HARTFORD

Rabbi's Corner

This Shabbat we continue our Couples Base Torah Study and Community Involvement Program. We inaugurated the program by bringing the Bechhofers before Rosh Hashanna and now continue with the Blaus.

This program has been made possible with a generous grant from Congregation Ados Israel. This program is intended to introduce our community to couples with different backgrounds, life experiences, and professional vantage points who exemplify the unprecedented learning achievements open to both men and women in today's Modern Orthodox world.

One of the goals of the program was to enable us to learn from couples not only here in America, but also some from Israel. By including couples who are teaching Torah in Israel in this program I think we can be exposed to a whole new dimension and perspective on Torah learning. One of the challenges of bringing in couples from Israel is not only the cost of bringing two people as opposed to one but also that couples often do not want to come together because it means having to leave their kids alone halfway across the world! It was then that we came up with a great solution of "hosting" a couple from Israel by having one of them come spend Shabbos with us and one of them teach us from Israel. Technology has made the world a much smaller place; why not take advantage of that in order to help us achieve the goal of this program!?

Rabbi Blau was my first teacher in yeshiva in Israel. He and Noa are an amazing model of a couple who is kind, "normal", and truly dedicated to Torah and Medinat Yisrael. It is an honor to hear from them and have them "join" us this weekend.

I hope you will be able to join us for Rabbi Blau's lectures over Shabbat and for Noa's lecture Sunday morning here in shul on big screen live from Israel. Sunday morning we will be serving breakfast and then having the shiur and I hope you will make the time to join us.

Shabbat Shalom Rabbi Weinberg

Blessings for Our Time - Rabbi Jay Kelman (www.torahinmotion.org)

On that day Jacob blessed them. He said, in time to come Israel will use you as a blessing. They will say, May G-d make you like Ephraim and Menashe (48:20)". Yaakov Avinu thus invokes the blessing that has become the standard blessings that parents give their children. While Ephraim and Menasheh are no doubt worthy candidates to serve as a model of blessing why are they specifically chosen? Why not Avraham, or Moshe and Aharon? When we think of the founding fathers (and mothers) we usually do not name Ephraim and Menasheh amongst them. In fact the Torah tells us precious little about their lives focusing on those who came before and after them. They seem to be part of the forgotten generations between Yosef and Moshe. However by reading between the lines we realize that Ephraim and Menasheh are the perfect pair to invoke as we bless our children.

Ephraim and Menashe are the first to have a relationship with their grandfather. In essence they are the first grandchildren of the Bible. When grandparents live to see their grandchildren following in their path it is truly an occasion for blessings. It is no coincidence that Bnei Yisroel are the descendants of Yaakov, the only one of our patriarchs who had contact with his grandchildren. It is this three-generation bond that guarantees the survival of the Jewish people, the evolving of a disparate family into a cohesive nation.

Ephraim and Menasheh also represent another first. They are the first brothers in the Torah who do not fight. While we may think this should be no big deal sibling rivalry (and worse) afflicts even "great" families. Cain and Hevel, Yitzchak and Yishmael. Yaakov and Eisav, Joseph and his brothers paint a gloomy picture of family dynamics. This trend is broken thankfully by Ephraim and Menasheh thus ensuring the formation of the Jewish nation. They thus set the model for Aharon, Moshe and Miriam who worked as one to build the nation. The importance of family unity is such that even as Yaakov sharply rebukes Shimon and Levi for their action against the people of Shechem, he praises their unity of mind and action. "Shimon and Levi are brothers, instruments of crime are their pairs (49:5)". They may be criminals but they work together as one. Similarly the generation of the Tower of Babel was spared even though they worshipped idols; they were unified in their actions, whereas the generation of flood though engaged in the seemingly lesser sin of theft were wiped out. When we do not follow the example of Ephraim and Menasheh, exile and destruction follow as Sin'nat Chinam does not allow the redemption to take place.

For us Jews living in exile there is an added factor. Ephraim and Menasheh grew up in a foreign culture, an alluring and attractive one at that. They sat at the feet of power and royalty. Yet despite being cut off from the extended family during their formative years, and having few positive role models (interestingly we are told nothing of their mother leaving one to assume that she cared little for the values of her husband's family) they remained loyal to the tradition of ethical monotheism espoused by their father. Ephraim and Menasheh show that Judaism can survive and thrive in all environments.

Our sages teach us that Ephraim is the representative of Torah and spirituality whereas Menasheh represents involvement in worldly affairs. While Yaakov thus places Ephraim before Menasheh, Torah must be our primary focus - it is the combination of the two that guarantees the survival of the Jewish people.

When Shabbat arrives - the family centered, spiritual center of the week it is Ephraim and Menasheh who serve as our model. Continuity, unity, commitment and diversity are the true blessings of the Jewish people. Shabbat Shalom!

HOUSE COMMITTEE UPDATE

The House Committee has been busy and we would like to update the Congregation about the following.

Firstly, thank you to all for participating in our highly successful chair campaign. We exceeded our goals. The chair order has been put on temporary hold for now due to the water damage sustained in the social hall from the recent storm. We currently have a pending claim with our insurance company that may allow us to rethink the project downstairs and perhaps allow us to look at ordering a different type of chair.

Our outside shingle roof is showing signs of fatigue. Some small leaks have developed necessitating repairs. The board has approved the work getting done. We are likewise moving forward with planning for some significant upgrades to the Sanctuary. A generous sponsor has agreed to replace all the carpeting upstairs. We are also pricing needed repairs and painting to our ceiling and walls. A committee is being formed that will research these projects and make recommendations to the board regarding materials used and cost.. In turn these plans will be presented to the Congregation. We likewise need to look into repairs for our outside front portico which has deteriorating columns.

The House committee will keep the Congregation aware of these projects with periodic updates. Barry Gordon
